This Lagoon 42 from 2018 started its life in an owners yacht in a charter program in the Med. After just nine weeks of charter, the owner changed his mind and took the yacht out of the charter program and sailed her to Sweden, where she is currently berthed and has seen very light use for coastal sailing. The is a 4 cabin version with a nice specification. The yacht can been regarded as existing on three levels, on the main level you will find the cockpit, the saloon, the galley, and the deck areas. One level up, you find the helmsman area, from which you maneuver the yacht with a great 360 view. One level down in each hull, you find 2 larger cabins with ensuite bathrooms with a separate shower stall. In addition to these two cabins, there are 2 more cabins that are slightly less roomy, both with their own ensuite bathrooms. As if this was not enough, in the bow of each hull there is a small cabin that can be used as extra guest space as if and when needed. More likely, these cabins will serve as great storage with access from deck.

More and more cruiser discover the benefits of sailing longer distances in a cruising catamaran. The volume and the taste social space all in one level is of course very appealing. Another aspect of the cruising cat that cruisers come to appreciate is the sailing characteristics when sailing down wind, which is the case in most blue water cruising situations in warmer climates. A run across the Atlantic to the Caribbean is one such example. Sail without heeling with a respectable turn of speed is something that is easy to appreciate. The draft of only 1.25 is another things to note. Anchoring is possible in shallow water, giving access to areas not accessible by monohulls.

Maximum area onboard? Sailing without heeling? Accessing safer and shallower anchorages? If any or all of these characteristics appeal to you, a cruising catamaran is hard to beat.
